Does the name FTR mean something to you? If so, please click here and read FTR Blog ( Archive for August 2011 - January 2012 ) FTR is FOR THE RECORD. Everyone who plays recorded audio (presumably from a disc, cassette, MP3, or similar) knows that some, or in extreme cases, most, sound bad. If you've ever listened to a CD, you'll know what I'm talking about. If you haven't, then you're probably wondering what all the fuss is about. So, what are the main causes of bad sound? We'll look at each one in turn: Bad or over-tight microphone windscreens Awful or non-existent EQ No remotes or "thick" mixes All of these things, put together, can make a cassette sound terrible, a CD sound terrible, or even a vinyl record sound terrible. There's a simple way to fix them and save money too. So, how to check them? Some of them are easy to spot, some will take a bit more time. Let's look at them in turn. Bad or over-tight microphone windscreens Most low-cost, unmarked audio record decks come with cheap microphone windscreens. The worst will be 100% cotton, although there are cheaper ones with a mixture of cotton and synthetic fibre. Some people use cloth microphone stands because they offer more protection than a cardboard mount. However, some feel that the cloth microphone is not very effective or doesn't work as well as the cardboard mount. In fact, some people actually believe that you should use a 10" or 12" slotted micro-cardboard microphone stand rather than a cardboard microphone mount for reasons that are beyond the scope of this blog. However, I did find this little tip on the web: " The solution is to use the "tape wind". Essentially, this is a muff that goes over the mouthpiece in such a way that the microphone is situated just where the wind needs to be. The purpose of this is to make a good, tight seal at the mouthpiece. The tape wind is usually sold with the windscreen and in the sealed bag of most equipment. All you need to do is buy a roll of micro-tape, use it to tape off the mouth
